Buddhism and Psychoanalysis ... Epstein relates the Buddhist Four Noble Truths to primary narcissism as described by Donald Winnicott in his theory on the true self and false self. The first truth highlights the inevitability of humiliation in our lives of our narcissistic self-esteem. The second truth speaks of the primal thirst that makes such humiliation inevitable. The third truth promises ...

Katkov Iurii If you don't like Tim's style of writing, I'd recommend you to still read the book - the density of high-quality ideas in it is incredible. I also don't see why the tools he proposes won't work for black lesbian women.

The 4-Hour Workweek by Timothy Ferriss - Goodreads

Despair = Suffering - Meaning. So Viktor Frankl says in the video above, summarizing his theory of logotherapy, which I've read at greater length in his book Man's Search for Meaning. In other words, if people suffer but see meaning in their life, and even in their suffering, they do not despair, as he himself did not despair when he was in Auschwitz and other concentration camps.

You just don't-- I know too much about life to have any optimism, because I know even if it's nice, it's going to lead to shit. I know that if you smile at somebody and they smile back, you've just decided that something shitty is going to happen ...
