The bullet is personified and represents the bloodthirsty nature of death. He speaks as though he offers his body as a sacrifice unto the bullet, realizing the dissatisfaction of its mortality. This is apparent where he says "if a body is what you want, then here is bone and gristle and flesh," although it's not explicitly stated.

Here, Bullet. If a body is what you want, then here is bone and gristle and flesh. Here is the clavicle-snapped wish, the aorta's opened valves, the leap thought makes at the synaptic gap. Here is the adrenaline rush you crave, that inexorable flight, that insane puncture into heat and blood. And I dare you to finish what you've started.

Here, Bullet | Fishouse

The words "Here, Bullet," could have been used then to offer the dog a treat for doing a hand-shake trick or uttered with hoarse urgency to lead him to his badly injured master pinned beneath a fallen tree. So, for me "Here, Bullet," was a trip back to my childhood sitting in front of the TV watching a thrilling plot unfold.

Here, Bullet shows no affiliation with any political side of any war, it is the experience of a soldier hit by a bullet. While Turner himself was part of the American Army during the Iraq war, his poetry speaks of a more universal pain. There is no mention of the greater goal, no reasoning, just the story of a single soldier in his final moments.
