The Line Of Polity Agent

In this installment Ian Cormac, a special agent of Earth Central Security (ECS), is sent to a planet called Masada that is run by a brutal Theocracy in order to convince the populous to join the Polity (the Polity will only "take over" a planet if 80% of the population "votes" to request them to do so).

The Line Of Polity (Agent Cormac, #2) by Neal Asher

"The Line of Polity" is number two in the sequence and it should be read as such - the sooner it follows to "Gridlinked" the better, as many characters along with Ian Cormac are carrying over from the first book. The Polity novels are sometimes categorized as hard science-fiction, but they are

There are problems with the observed link between genes and politics. One is that it is fairly crude so far. Liberals and conservatives come in many varieties: one can be an economic liberal and a social conservative, say, favoring a large state but opposing abortion; or an economic conservative and a social liberal, favoring the free market but supporting abortion and gay rights.
