Thinking Fragments provides a brilliant critique of psychoanalytic, feminist, and postmodern theory. Examining the writings of Freud, Winnicott, Lacan, Chodorow, Irigaray, Derrida, Rorty, and Foucault, among others, Flax conducts a "conversation" among psychoanalysts, feminist thinkers, and postmodern theorists, evaluating the ways in which each group of thinkers succeeds in coming to terms with crises in contemporary Western culture.

Thinking Fragments : Psychoanalysis, Feminism, and ...

With the demise of objectivist notions of truth, knowledge, self, and power, intellectuals have devised new modes of thinking, as exemplified by the development of psychoanalysis, feminism, and postmodernism. These strands of thought both reflect and contribute to the uncertainties of the contemporary West.

It might appear at the outset that any alliance between feminism and psychoanalysis would have to be coordinated on treacherous ground: in Sigmund Freud's lecture on "Femininity," for instance, while discussing the "riddle of femininity" (Freud 1968, 116) or of sexual differentiation, Freud's rhetoric impeaches women as "the problem" (113) and excuses members of his audience from this indictment by offering the hope that they are "more masculine than feminine" (117).

Psychoanalytic Feminism (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

Feminism, psychoanalysis and literary interpretation have more in common than their early histories might seem to suggest - or promise. Each of these intellectual and socially engaged activities is based on premises (about text, psyche and culture) that undermine familiar or received wisdom. At times, they seem to ignore one another, but often they have coincided - and collided - in startling and productive ways.

"Thinking Fragments advances theoretical dialogue across a number of difficult borders. Of special importance is its sustained interrogation of postmodern and psychoanalytic theory from the perspective of feminist theory.

Thinking Fragments: Psychoanalysis, Feminism, and ...

Feminisms and environmental justice are some of the names of struggles to understand nature-culture linkages and conceptualize just worlds for non-humans and their human kin. In this paper, I revisit my journey of doing environmental justice research, i.e. of my feminist scientific practice in Asia and Latin America. In this retrospective telling I highlight how gender, political economy, and ...
